-U.S.N.-The worldwide WAW standard, under development since last year by the E.C.'s Schnecke Corporation and Diable Avionics of the U.S.N., has officially been finalized. The standard, known as "MULS", establishes a common interface for the integration of interchangeable body, arm, leg, and computer components. A number of companies have pledged support for the standard, which should lead to dramatic cost reduction once mass production begins. The U.S.N. military has already expressed interest in purchasing WAWs that employ the MULS standard. New, MULS-compatible WAWs are expected to roll out later this year.

A resolution to the African Conflict is expected any day now. The fierce fighting that analysts originally feared would dissolve into ugly, guerrilla-style warfare was brought to a screeching halt when combat WAWs were introduced into the battle–a military first. These machines, offering substantial improvements over previous combat vehicles in terms of maneuverability and versatility, have become the focus of worldwide attention and will undoubtedly play a key role in future conflicts. There are reports that the Union of North African States (U.N.A.S.) Army, rumored to have been supplied with arms by the E.C., employed previously unseen experimental WAWs on the battlefield. The U.N.A.S. has denied all such claims. – JBNN

The term refers to those who are not members of the military, royalty (royal family), or civil service. The term "civilian participants" is always close in meaning, but differs significantly in that it does not include civil servants. He was one of the members dispatched with the combat WAW, which the O.C.U. Army expects to be the next main land weapon, for the purpose of establishing an independent mobile attack company. He was highly regarded for his involvement in the development of the WAW as a test pilot, and he was entrusted with the operational command of the unit in the sensitive environment of operational activities with the new weapon before its full-scale introduction.

After the conflict subsided and his unit was disbanded, he remained in Africa to support the rebuilding movement, achieving many military victories. Because of his achievements, he has been called "THE REAL MCCOYJ" by the locals for some time.

When a support program involving the introduction of the combat WAW into actual combat operations was planned, he was seconded to the military as a maintenance worker (rank: adjutant) and joined the dispatch team as a pilot himself to collect actual combat data. He was killed while defending McCoy during an engagement with enemy mercenaries during the attack on the port of Lekki, Guiana's stronghold. He had romantic feelings for McCoy that were distinctly different from admiration. Although he did not directly communicate this to McCoy until the end, we would like to believe that his conviction to protect his loved ones left something in McCoy's heart.

Equipped with superior analytical and decision-making skills, he has demonstrated his ability to maximize the use of the intelligence and information obtained by the Intelligence Bureau with the forces at hand, leading to victory in many local battles that have influenced the course of conflicts.

Unlike Lt. McCoy, who was not bound by military regulations, he was a picture of a hard man who rarely had the opportunity to communicate with his superiors on matters other than those related to his duties, but he was a very open-minded person who always appreciated achievements without blaming those who lacked decorum.

Although he seems to be a highly capable pilot, he is a man of excessive pace, with a reckless disregard for the chain of command and a lack of civility in his behavior toward his superiors. However, he has some unexpected connections, such as negotiating with arms dealers to alleviate a shortage of supplies.

Former W.A. Army Major. He defected to C.A. with former President Encomo in protest against Gizenga's methods. He continued to support Enkomo as a key member of the Warrior Lance and then WALF. If Enkomo was the banner of the organization, symbolizing anti-Guyanese sentiment, Ileo was the banner that held the spear together, and he was in charge of the execution unit.

Although he would normally be on Gizenga's side, he has long been a member of the anti-Gizenga faction, and after the coup d'état in which his brother, an air force general of the largest faction, died, he became even more determined to support Gizenga. He was a core member of the WALF, and after the S.A.U.S. began supporting him, he fought as a member of the Independent Mobile Offensive Squadron, which had lost Adjutant Furphy. His nickname "Siyango, God of Thunder" was given to him when the WALF was engaged in guerrilla warfare in various parts of the country, in honor of his bravery and courage in fighting the enemy by taking their weapons and sometimes even their very weapons.

He was not originally a soldier, but a member of the Schnecke Institute for Advanced Technology in North Africa. He lost his father, the creator of WAW, in an attack on the institute five years ago, and has been fighting for revenge against Sinsemia, the group behind the attack, and whoever is behind it.

A former W.A. general, he seized power in a coup d'état at the end of 2033 and proclaimed the establishment of the Guinean Gulf Unity (Guineana), of which he was the first president. He himself became the first president of Guinea. Although he initially proposed community reforms in line with the principles of the uprising, these reforms were never realized, and the regime was terrorized by unjustified purges and repression under the guise of reforms. Furthermore, the government obtained arms from E.C., strengthened its military power, and increased its control over the country.

After the destruction of ZAINGO, WALF, with the support of S.A.U.S., launched a vigorous counterattack. Guiana collapses, partly due to the uprising of dissatisfied elements. He fled to U.N.A.S. territory and disappeared in the Sahara, where he was later confirmed dead.

The leader of the independent government of ZANGO, which the C.A. Northern Province Army declared to be established on the strength of its armed forces. A former army colonel, his influence was so great that he expanded his power at breakneck speed from a fortress he had built in the Bongo Mountains. His rapid advance was supported by the substantial military strength of the Northern Army, the mercenaries he recruited as military advisors, and the provision of weapons from Guineana.

After the S.A.U.S. military intervened at the request of the C.A. leaders who had fled the country, Zango's momentum slowed. He barely survived the fall of his mountain fortress, but was killed in a S.A.U.S. airstrike on a Chadian stronghold, which destroyed ZANGO.

He is the oldest member and leader of the Bamia Unit, a mercenary force recruited by Zango via the Union of North African States (U.N.A.S.). The "unit" did not necessarily consist of all members, but each member sometimes led his own unit to various locations.

The Bamia Group was entrusted by Sinsemia, Zango's military advisor, with the C.A. invasion and conducted vigorous operations from the Niango mountain fortress, but the war situation gradually deteriorated due to the intervention of the S.A.U.S. forces. When the Independent Mobile Offensive Squadron attacked the fortress, he was killed in a desperate defensive battle to buy time for Zaius to flee.

A member of the Bamia group of mercenaries that supported Zango's invasion of C.A., which sparked the conflict. A very taciturn character, he silently carried out his duties under Rieder and Barry, both skilled professional warriors, in sharp contrast to Andlow, a younger member of the group who talked a lot.

The Bamiyan Group conducted vigorous activities based in the Niango mountain fortress, but the intervention of the S.A.U.S. forces, which had deployed the WAW, gradually turned the situation into a war of attrition. When the Independent Maneuver Attack Squadron attacked the fortress, it launched a desperate defense to buy time for Zaius to escape. All members of Bamir's group, including himself, were killed.

The name "Bamia" is an acronym for the initials of the members. Perhaps by coincidence, the spelling "FBAMIAJ" also means "okra" (native of northeastern Africa).

Of course, he was also aiming for leadership after the integration of the whole of Africa. As it turned out, this policy led to the escalation and prolongation of the conflict.

Toward the end of the conflict, Gustav Zelman, who served as the window for E.C.'s weapons supply, rebelled and plotted to prolong the conflict. However, thanks to the efforts of the Independent Mobile Offensive Squadron, peace talks were held with Jebar at the request of W.A. President Encomo. The conflict finally came to an end.

He is the leader of "Zerbelsgard," an anti-terrorist operations unit dispatched by the U.N.A.S. to investigate and monitor countries involved in conflicts. Although he had retired from the front lines after losing both of his legs while serving in the Special Forces, he had been assigned to establish a supply route for E.C. weapons to the C.A. and W.A. through the U.N.A.S., so his track record and personal connections were decisive factors in his selection.

However, he built his own weapons manufacturing plant and began supplying black-ops weapons, and expanded the Zerbelsgard as a private army unit. Toward the end of the conflict, he planned an attack on the peace talks between the U.N.A.S. and the W.A., but was thwarted by an independent mobile assault squadron, and was killed during the engagement.

At the end of the conflict, the gang escapes to Timgad, where ancient Roman ruins remain, and plans to attack the venue of the peace talks between the U.N.A.S. and the W.A., using the Salishagan rifle, which has just been commercialized. However, just before the launch, they were engaged by the rushing Independent Mobile Assault Squadron, and all members of the squadron were killed.

A member of the Zerbelsgard triangle, he boasts reflexes that allow him to respond immediately to unexpected attacks, as well as unparalleled accuracy in shooting. His outstanding skill in piloting a World War AW, which supports the combat power of his unit, is largely due to his outstanding physical abilities. He says that in actual combat, he fights as his body reacts, without thinking out of the box.

Toward the end of the conflict, he and Zelman participated in a plan to attack the peace talks between the U.N.A.S. and W.A. using Sarishagan rifles transferred from Kazakhstan. However, in an engagement with an independent mobile attack squadron, the Zerbersguards were wiped out. It shared the fate of the other members.

He also possesses an innate intuition, a sixth sense, which seems to be a major factor in his assignment to the Zurich Rebel Guard. In fact, Newmark relies on his abilities, and often accompanies him on assignments.

At the end of the conflict, Zerbelsgaard fled to Timgad. He used the Salishagan rifle, which he was able to commercialize, to fight the U.N.A.S. and the W.N.A.S.

The unit was exhausted before the crucial operation to rescue the core members of WALF, which S.A.U.S. had begun to support, and without the replenishment of supplies at this time, the war situation would have been very different.

On the other hand, he was also a front man for the O.C.U. military in the B.D. development project, which was promoted in conspiracy with Sakata Industries and some forces of the U.S.N. military, and managed the personnel recruited as B.D. material candidates and liaised with the conspirators. After the end of the conflict, he joined forces with the U.S.N. Army to conduct a cleanup operation of "Huffman's Souls," including Lloyd and other ex-members who had left the U.S.N. He was able to complete his mission at the port of Louvidis, where he was able to find the gang's complete crew. They pursued the gang until they had them completely surrounded at the port of Louvidis, but he was killed during an engagement with them.

Former Captain in the O.C.U. Army and Defense Forces. A failed reconnaissance mission he led resulted in the death of his fiancée (who was actually alive at the time). The resulting incident leads to the outbreak of the Second Huffman Conflict. A year later, while working as a fighter in the arena, he was recruited by Colonel Olson, who was in charge of establishing a mercenary unit, to become its commander. He was recruited by Colonel Olson, who was in charge of establishing a mercenary unit, to head the unit and deploy it to the front lines in various regions. However, the establishment of the Canyon Crow was a result of the efforts of Sakata Industries and the U.S.N. military's special operations agency Nirvana, which was established by the O.C.U. and the U.S.N. to develop the Canyon Crow. Even this dispute was planned and controlled by a series of organizations related to the development, and by both the O.C.U. and U.S.N. military departments.

While traveling from place to place, he learned the full extent of the plan, and he and the rest of Canyon Crow threw themselves into a new battle to stop the military plot, releasing the O.C.U. military's control.

One of the reconnaissance team members involved in the Lakas Incident. His plane was lost in a battle during a mission, and he is presumed missing and has not been satisfactorily investigated.

The incident was a farce by the O.C.U. and the U.S.N. to cover up the B.D. development project, and the reconnaissance unit was made the scapegoat. Severely wounded, she was recovered by the Nirvana Agency, treated at a medical facility in Greylock City, and then transferred to a research facility where she underwent conversion surgery to a Type B device. What a cruel and ironic coincidence that she, who hated war and wanted a peaceful life with her fiancé Lloyd, had the aptitude to become a B.D. material!

She is a talented young woman who served as second-in-command of the C.A.D. Her ability to assess situations calmly and accurately enabled her to function efficiently as the rationale in Canon Crow, and she provided strong support to her captain, who was characterized as a natural WAP pilot. Although kept a secret from the rest of the team, his official rank in the Army Defense Forces was Lieutenant Colonel, and he was the one who knew the details of the plan to develop B.D. And as part of that plan, the B.D. was to be developed into a "B.D." (Border Defense) program. As part of the plan, he was assigned to "monitor" each Canyon Crow member (= B.D. material candidate).

After learning the full extent of the conspiracy, he decided to leave the military, and in response to the captain's decision, he abandoned his surveillance duties and continued to work with the former members who rejoined him. Not much is known about his activities after the ceasefire, including his movements during the mass suicide of the souls of Huffman, the militia group with which he had joined.

One of the members of the reconnaissance unit involved. He was transferred to the same unit as Captain Lloyd after the incident.

Mr. Olson was discharged from the military and was one of the first to establish Canyon Crow.

He was recruited by a scout from the U.S. Army. Although he has a longer military career and more experience than Koutaido due to his seniority, he respects Koutaido not only as a superior officer but also as a human being. He followed Lloyd's lead when Lloyd learned of the plot after the end of the Second Huffman War, and accompanied Lloyd in his subsequent escape and counterinsurgency activities.

He is a member of the Sakata Industries management family and the younger brother of Koichi Sakata, the president at the time of the conflict. He felt a sense of rebellion against his father Reiji's educational policy and the company's management policy, which was heavily focused on weapons development since the acquisition of Heinemann Industrie in 2070, and joined the O.C.U. military upon graduation from university. These hardcore mercenaries have no religious or ideological affiliation, nor do they have a specific country or organization to which they belong, other than their "reward for combat service. His past history, including his nationality and military service, is largely shrouded in mystery. In addition to his obsession with money, he has absolute confidence in his talent as a WAP pilot, which could be described as overconfidence, and these qualities make him the perfect mercenary for the job. Perhaps this is why he is so arrogant and crude in his everyday behavior, and seems to be a persona non grata in terms of cooperation with others, but he and J.J., who was also recruited as a mercenary, seem to have an uncanny affinity for each other. Sometimes the two of them would go off together and engage in aggressive combat.

When the captain's action and the departure of his troops led to many rebellions in the unit, he initially remained in the unit with Karen and J.J. and continued his duty, but later abandoned his mission and joined them during an engagement with the gang. His whereabouts are unknown.

A mercenary from South Africa. He originally wanted to join the regular army, but since he could not be verified as a legitimate settler, he joined Canyon Crow, which was established after the outbreak of the Second Huffman Conflict. He was chosen to join Canyon Crow, which was established after the outbreak of the Second Huffman Conflict, because he had experience as a WAP pilot in his military career back home, had good taste and physical ability, and the uncertainty of his identity was a favorable factor when considering the true purpose of the unit. Unlike Keith, who was also a mercenary by profession, he grew up in an economically strapped family and had a clear goal of supporting his family back home. Therefore, he sent most of his earnings to his family.

During the mission to clean up Huffman's soul, when Captain Lloyd and many others rebelled and deserted, he chose to stay behind to keep the money going home to his family. However, he later joined up with other former members who had rebelled and worked together.

A Chinese woman who came to Huffman Island in search of her brother, who disappeared suddenly about five years ago. She challenged Lloyd to a fight in the arena in Menasa, and after confirming his skill, she received his approval to enlist in exchange for "information about Karen Muir. She was hospitalized in the Greylock hospital until two months ago after she was caught up in a battle in the war zone, where she shared a room with Karen Muir. Based on his background and the rumors circulating around him, she decided that joining his unit would be a shortcut to finding her brother, and she waited for the unit to enter Menasa.

Just before the invasion of Fort Morgan, he was reunited with his younger brother Yee-Hin and fulfilled his objective, relying on information about "deserter U.S.N. soldiers" that was brought to the unit, but he remained in the unit with his brother. He also joined Lloyd's side during the rebellion in the unit and left the unit with him to help him in his activities.

He was so fascinated by the battle that he secretly left his native China and drifted to Huffman Island, where small-scale clashes between the O.C.U. and U.S.N. and riots by militia groups were frequent. Since he was a child, he had been improving his WAP piloting skills in the arena, and even after arriving on the island, he dreamed of further improving his skills in the various fighting arenas and entering the arena to fight in real battles. He was recruited by a Nirvana agent who heard rumors of a "boy fighter" who occasionally appeared in the arena, and he joined the U.S.N. Army. However, at the Nirvana research facility where he was taken, there was no end to the number of soldiers who disappeared. Finally, he felt fear for his situation and escaped from the facility with a looted WAP. While being chased by the troops led by Driscoll, he was rescued by Canyon Crow.

Later, at the insistence of his sister Mayfa, he was approved to join the unit and remained there after the end of the Second Huffman War, continuing to support Lloyd.

A woman who immigrated to Huffman Island as part of the first group of settlers. After settling on the island, she became unable to bear children due to an illness. But her love of children did not deter her from working as a childcare worker at an orphanage in Lark Valley. Later, she learned to fly a WAP almost entirely on her own, as a means of self-defense to protect her children from danger.

In June 2090, tensions in the Roxta Desert rose dramatically as U.S. forces took control of the Freedom Dam. A top-secret plan to transfer B.D. materials to the outskirts of Lark Valley was set in motion, but failed when the urban war broke out. Lark Valley is destroyed by U.S.N. cruise missiles launched in the name of attacking the supply base to prevent the plan from being exposed. The only survivor, she learns that a Canyon Crow captain who visited the ruined town was the cause of the conflict, and joins the unit to watch him die.

After the outbreak of the Second Huffman Conflict, he joined the army as a combat soldier, hoping for an early end to the conflict.

Canyon Crow, who had come to search the hospital based on information from Jan Mayfa, joins in to provide cover and succeeds in fighting off the enemy forces. Formerly a sergeant major in the O.C.U. Army. He used to be a WAP pilot, and although he was a bit rough around the edges due to his profession, he was a good man with a sincere personality. However, he lost his only son, who chose the same path as his father, in the Second Hachman War, and since his discharge from the army, he has become a daily drinker at a bar. His personality has also changed drastically, and he has become a drunkard who even the drunks in the bar now shun him.

He met Canyon Crow's captain, Lloyd, at a seedy tavern he frequented every evening. Canyon Crow had just finished escorting a supply convoy to New Milgan, and was taking a brief leave of absence in Menasa until his next assignment. It is easy to imagine that their encounter was not pleasant, but the fact that Alder was no longer seen in the bar after that suggests that Lloyd, who could no longer trust even his former skills, allowed him to join the army.

Former sergeant in the O.C.U. Army and Defense Forces. He was discharged from the army before the outbreak of the Second Hachman War and became a fighter in the arena, using "Kong" as his ring name. We do not know the details of why he was discharged, but since there is no record of his punishment, it is likely that it was a simple matter of "it suited me better. He made the right choice, and since his debut in the arena, he has been on a winning streak. After a year, he was the main challenger in the arena. By the end of the year, he was a well-known champion in his main arena, the Freedom arena. His winning streak would be broken by Canyon Crow Captain Mouthid, who visited the city as part of the O.C.U. Army's invasion force of Freedom.

Few know what happened to the once invincible champion after his defeat, but there are no records of his appearances with Lloyd, the man who had put him on the map, and the prevailing theory is that he joined the mercenary army.

Former lieutenant in the O.C.U. and Army Defense Forces. He was once a member of a mobile division and an elite officer on the path to a promising career, but he made a blunder in which a unit he led was annihilated due to an error in judgment. Although he was never held accountable for his negligence, he decided to retire from the military because he could no longer bear the guilt of his actions. He has since continued to travel the battlefield as a mercenary. Because he dared to choose dangerous work, it is not unusual for him to lose his comrades in battle, and his peers call him by the nickname "the Grim Reaper. Perhaps he knows this, and perhaps the code name he has given his WAP, "FDeath," suggests the deep darkness that consumes his mind.

After the outbreak of the Second Huffman War, he met Polunga in the volunteer army he joined as a mercenary soldier, and for some reason they have been working together ever since. When Polunga got into a brawl with O.C.U. soldiers in the city center of Peseta, he came into contact with Lloyd and others who interceded. He was seen leaving with them afterwards.

A former 0.C.U. Volunteer soldier, he is a descendant of the Aboriginal people of O.C.U. Australia, who became increasingly urbanized after the mid-20th century, and by the turn of the 21st century had mixed with other races to such an extent that he also inherited many Caucasian genetic traits. The exact date of his arrival on Huffman Island is unknown, but it is known that he volunteered to join the volunteer army that was organized soon after the outbreak of the Second Huffman War. His fighting style relies more on his natural instincts than on his piloting skills, as he fights for peace and to stop fighting. However, perhaps as a result of his pure conviction, he has no hesitation in his every action and decision, and has achieved more results in battle than one might expect.

He is working with Bobby, a mercenary he met in the volunteer army, but it is unclear why he and Bobby are together. After he came into contact with Canyon Crow in Peceta, he accompanied Bobby to the same unit.

He is a former lieutenant in the O. C.U. Army. He is not sure if he has ever had a serious illness, but for some reason he is convinced that he will not live long, and since his retirement from the military, he has been living an ephemeral life, traveling from arena to arena in various parts of the country. The code name he has given to his WAP, FCancerJ, is simply "cancer cell," but whether this is a self-deprecating name for his disease or a figment of his imagination, we do not know. We do not know for sure, but we can say with certainty that he is convinced of its existence.

The Second Huffman Conflict was nearing its conclusion, and the invasion of Fort Monas by the o.c.u. forces was about to begin, when he met Canyon Crow Captain Lloyd in the arena in the same city. Although it is unclear what kind of exchange took place there, it is believed that Lloyd defeated him in a match in the arena and that he went along with the unit. No one has seen him in the arena since.

He is the soul leader of the armed terrorist organization Huffman. His age, nationality, and background are completely unknown. In addition, all members of the organization wear masks that cover their entire faces and never remove them when they appear in criminal videos, so no one knows who they really are.

The Soul of Huffman was organized by Gentz prior to the Second Huffman Conflict, and although its stated goal is the independence of Huffman Island, in reality it is mainly engaged in subversive activities targeting Sakata Industrii. This stance has been clear from the beginning, and the group has conducted steady intelligence activities to investigate and inform the public about the status of weapons development and other activities. Since the company has never targeted anyone other than itself and has never killed civilians, public opinion has been favorable to the company.

After the end of the Second Huffman Conflict, 0. After the end of the Second Huffman War, he came into contact with Canyon Crow during a mop-up operation by the O.C.U. military. It is believed that he joined them later, but his life and death are unknown after the mass suicide riot on Kung River Island.

Sakata Industriy Chairman, born in 2030, is a man of vision, with prodigious management skills, who transformed Sakata Pharmaceutical from a small pharmaceutical company in the O.C.U. of Japan into a world-class corporation in his own lifetime. Since his son, Koichi, became president, he has been watching Koichi's moves carefully, concerned about the company's management policy that has shifted to a strong emphasis on weapons development and the disturbing cozy relationship between the O.C.U. and the U.S.N. military, which has grown closer as a result of the change. However, he was unable to stop the B.D. development project from going out of control, and when Koichi gave up his activities on Huffman Island and tried to escape with him to Long River Island, the car he was riding in was attacked and he was killed.

President of Sakata Industries, born in 1959. He replaced his father, the current chairman, as president. He has an insatiable ambition to expand his control not only within the company, but also within the industry, and even into the political and business worlds. The symbol of this is the "Metalworker Project," which encompassed the development of B.D. and the WAP equipped with the system. He was pushing this project, which had major humanitarian problems, against the backdrop of a secret agreement between the Republic of ZAFTRA, the U.S.N., and the O.C.U., all of which have their own military backers. When it became difficult to proceed with the project on the island, he fled to Long Reverse Island, where a secret development facility was being built underground, but was killed in an explosion at the facility.

A reporter for the New York Times, a major U.S. newspaper. He was a reporter for the New York Diz, a major U.S.N. newspaper, when he was transferred to the Huffman Island bureau for his reporting on the collusion between the U.S.N. military and business, which he had arbitrarily published just after the outbreak of the second Huffman War. Undaunted, he went to cover the crash site of an O.C.U. military transport plane in the mountains northeast of New Milgan in 2091, only to be attacked by U.S.N. troops who showed up to retrieve the cargo, ignoring his identification code. He was rescued by Canyon Crow, who had also rushed to retrieve the cargo, and thereafter continued his own conflict reporting while being treated as a member of the same unit.

One day in February 2092, a front-page article in the newspaper Dirieh Friedhelm exposing the second conflict in the eight Hmans caused a sensation around the world. He became a well-known journalist, and later published a book entitled "Islands of the Fatherland," which summarized his coverage of the conflict.

A doctor working in a former U.S. Army field hospital northeast of Fort Mornath. He was once an officer in the O.C.U.'s Department of Science and Technology, and contributed to the establishment of the basic technology for Type B devices in B.D. through research conducted in the 2070s using fetal brains and cultured tissue. After his discharge from the military in the form of desertion due to doubts about his research, he worked as a doctor at the aforementioned facility, but at the end of the Second Huffman War, he came into contact with Canyon Crow, who came to investigate when he was suspected of communicating with the spirit of Huffman. After Lloyd left the army and began fighting with the spirit of Huffman, he continued to support them as they were pursued by the military.

After losing her hometown and family in a war between the U.S.-backed government and anti-government guerrillas, she was picked up by the anti-government guerrillas and forced to live as a guerrilla soldier. Later, during a guerrilla clearance operation supported by the U.S.N. military, she was taken prisoner and offered "work as an agent" by Driscoll at the prison in exchange for her release, and was reborn as "White Shadow," a complete spy with her past erased.

In addition to monitoring Second Lieutenant Greenfield, a candidate for B.D. material, she was also engaged in intelligence and terrorist activities under the direction of Driscoll, and was marked by the Intelligence Service. After the end of the Second Huffman War, she was persuaded by Second Lieutenant Greenfield to join the military in pursuit of corruption, a move that jeopardized her position, but she was protected by agents of the Intelligence Directorate, and her existence went underground once again.

A second lieutenant in the U.S.N. Army, he led a platoon that was defeated from the city during the O.C.U.'s attempt to retake Freedom in August 2091. The platoon was isolated in the Wayne Mountains northwest of Freedom, pursued by an O.C.U. pursuit party, when it was rescued by Lynx Platoon. Immediately after the fall of Freedom, the border defense line on the Meer River collapsed. The main forces were deployed to the newly established defense line around Peseta, and he joined the stretched-out defense force in Belchica. As WAP was out of the country, he went into action with a B.D. prototype that Dr. Gilmore had prepared. During the engagement, the prototype's system went haywire, and it was destroyed by concentrated enemy fire, and he was killed in the explosion.

Greenough, former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. U.S.N. Army with Lieutenant General Yield as father. Second Lieutenant. Marine Corps Special Forces Training.

After accumulating experience, he transferred to Black Hound and served as platoon leader of B Team, but violated orders during an operation to destroy a rebel stronghold on the "Free Planet," and was reassigned to the Special Service Agency Nirvana. While at Nirvana, he was present at the Larkas Incident and attempted to investigate the real nature of the research being conducted by the agency. However, just after the outbreak of the Second Huffman Conflict, he was transferred three times, and since then he has served as the commander of a platoon in the 334th Battalion, 112th Special Aircraft Company.

From the very beginning of his enlistment, he was under the watchful eye of the Nirvana Agency as a candidate for B.D. Materiel. Toward the end of the conflict, when he hears about his situation from one of his own supervisors, he attempts to expose the truth and is taken into custody at least once. However, he was freed in exchange for a deal with the Ministry of Information, which was investigating the plotters, and helped to hunt down and foil the plot's central figure, Brigadier General Winger.

He is the second-in-command of Lynx Platoon, a U.S.N. staff sergeant. Since serving as Second Lieutenant Greenfield's aide-de-camp in his old Marine Corps unit, he has supported him every time he has been transferred to a new unit, requesting a transfer to his new assignment. He had a much longer military career than Second Lieutenant Greenfield, and it would be normal for him to feel that his superior, but inexperienced second lieutenant, who was so inexperienced that he was assigned to him "by the grace of his parents," was unreliable. The reason for this is a matter of imagination, but he was like a boy. The fact that he was so young and had such an idealistic attitude, which was just one step ahead of his youthfulness, must have impressed him.

It is unclear what happened after he and Second Lieutenant Greenfield contributed to the investigation of the conspiracy within the military over the B.D. development program. However, he undoubtedly took part in the security force that was organized after the incident was over, and in which Second Lieutenant Greenfield volunteered to serve as platoon leader.

He is a corporal in the U.S.N. Army. He is the mood-maker in Lynx Platoon, where the captain and XO are all serious, hard-nosed men who are loyal to their duty, but he is the only one who keeps a sense of humor even during operations. Unlike his XO, Sanders, he has known Ensign Greenfield since they were assigned to Black Hound, but he seems to feel something more than a sense of kinship with the captain because they are of the same generation. His trust in him is as strong as Sanders'. When he was repeatedly transferred to the Nirvana Agency and later to the Lynx Platoon, he did not hesitate to request a transfer with them.

He accompanied the commander in his efforts to stop a plot by Brigadier General Winger and other supporters in the military to develop B.D., and supported the activities that led to the subsequent arrest of the brigadier general. After the incident was over, his movements are unknown, but like other former members of Lynx Platoon, there is no record of his discharge, and he probably joined the security forces under the command of 2nd Lieutenant Greenfield.

He was assigned to destroy an anti-aircraft radar facility on the invasion route in preparation for a large-scale invasion of Freedom, which was his first mission as a member of the unit. Since joining the military, he had only worked in a logistics support unit, so he was somewhat apprehensive about fighting a WAP and assessing the situation on the front line. However, after successfully completing the aforementioned mission and a large-scale operation at Freedom, he established himself as an indispensable mechanic in the unit.

At the end of the Second Huffman Conflict, he was sent to a detention facility when his captain was taken into custody, but was later released and escaped from the facility with the captain's help. Like Corporal Fines, who is in charge of mechanics, he was assigned to Lynx Platoon as an additional member before the large-scale operation to invade Freedom. In his previous unit, he was in charge of long-range offensive support, and his solid marksmanship earned him trust within the unit. In fact, he proved his shooting accuracy in his first mission after joining Lynx Platoon, a mission to destroy an O.C.U. anti-aircraft radar facility, and in the subsequent Freedom Invasion. He is very outspoken and rarely opens his mouth except when necessary, both on and off the mission, which made it difficult for the team members to get used to communicating with each other. Captain, U.S.N. Army. Known as one of the most elite WAP units in the entire Army, he was the commander of the 64th Mobile Squadron, Special Airplane Company, Tank Division, which was commonly called "Hell's Wall" due to the severity of its missions. The selection of members was not based on their military service or rank, but simply on their WAP piloting skills and past performance. He took pride in being a WAP pilot, and although his rank was captain, his outstanding performance in the unit made him more influential and influential than a colonel in the military.

In the Second Huffman Conflict, the unit was successful in many important missions, including the invasion of Freedom. However, in August 2091, during the O.C.U.'s operation to retake Freedom, the unit was destroyed in a defensive battle near the city, losing most of its members. Later, when the O.C.U. invaded Fautomonas near the ceasefire, he joined the defense force with a large motorized weapon, but was defeated and killed by a suppression unit that reached the center of the city.

Chief Sergeant, U.S.N. Army. He was the smallest (at 174 cm) on the Hell's Wall, where most of the men were physically fit and well built, and he felt a great deal of complex about it. Compared to the infantry, his size had little effect on him and even gave him an advantage in the cramped cockpit of the WAP, but this fact did not seem to help his self-esteem in the slightest. Perhaps as a reaction to this sense of inferiority, or perhaps as a sign of his willpower, he disliked the heavily equipped WAP, and instead made full use of settings that emphasized reaction speed and light maneuverability, and developed a combat style that took advantage of the speed and instantaneous force that he prided himself on in the flesh.

In the Second Huffman Conflict, he performed as expected in many missions, including the successful invasion of Freedom. However, in August 1991, during the O-C.U. Army's operation to retake Freedom, he was killed in a defensive battle deployed at a frontline base near the city, when he was shot down in an engagement with a Canyon Crow that had joined the enemy invasion force.

Corporal in the U.S. Army. A cheerful African-American pilot who loves music. His love of music is so infectious that he can be heard humming in his communications even during battle, and even on the walls of hell, where there are many unique characters, he stands out as a unique character. However, it was not a joke, but an instinctive behavior rooted in his ancestry, a kind of mental concentration that was so natural that it was performed unconsciously. His attitude toward his assignments was very sincere and serious. In his missions, he was mainly responsible for long-range strike support, but he preferred to use armaments that could be adapted to various situations.

During the Second Huffman War, he served as a member of Hell's Wall until his death. He participated in every battle that Hell's Wall experienced, from the highly successful Freedom Invasion to the Freedom Defense, in which the unit was effectively disbanded.

Corporal in the U.S.N. Army. The youngest member of the Hell's Wall. Although his abilities are slightly inferior to those of other members of his unit, who have fought many battles in the past, he has an unparalleled sense of combat, and he is always at the front of the WAP, which specializes in combat. He also had a unique sensibility to enjoy combat as if it were a game, and perhaps because of this, the brutality he displayed toward the enemy was sometimes out of the ordinary.

During the O.C.U.'s operation to retake Freedom in August 2091, the Hell's Wall was decimated in a defensive battle at the frontline base, but he escaped to Mount Wayne just in time. Because of this decision and his luck, he became the only Hell's Wall member to survive the Second Huffman Conflict. In Wayne Mountain, he joined a platoon led by 2nd Lieutenant Roland, who had also been defeated and isolated. He is later rescued by Lynx Platoon and, together with other members of his unit, contributes to the prevention of a plot to develop B.D. and the capture of Brigadier General Winger.

Nirvana Institutional Researcher

Dr. Guinole More

A researcher at the U.S.N. Army's Special Weapons Development Agency, Nirvana. He was once involved in research at the 0.C.U. Army on biocomputers using the brains of fetuses born through artificial insemination, but his work was cut short when the chief researcher disappeared with most of his research data. After that, Driscoll invited him to join the Nirvana Institute, where he began development of the current B.D.- both the day-type and s-type devices using the brains of adult soldiers. After the agency was disbanded due to the revelation of the conspiracy, the development of the S-type device continued within the military, although its future is unclear.

A captain in the U.S.N. Army and commander of the 212th Independence Division of the Nirvana Agency, he played a central role in the B.D. development program, directing everything from the recruitment of B.D. material candidates to the operation of the agency. Although he is a captain in rank, his support extends to the upper echelons, and he has the power to free brigade-sized forces outside the regular chain of command.

Although it is a matter of conjecture due to his death and the loss of related documents, intelligence investigations indicate that he was dispatched from the ZAFTRA Republic and was believed to have had some other agenda than to promote the aforementioned plan. Although the curtain was drawn back on the investigation of the truth with the downfall of Brigadier General Winger, the brilliant flow of ZAFTRA's statements and expansion, using the PMO's intervention in the ceasefire as a springboard, was like watching a play along the lines of a scenario. What would he have said if he had survived the second Yahman conflict? The remaining questions are intriguing.

Land Destroyer Commander

Xaver F. Kirkland

B -

Colonel, U.S.N. Army

Colonel, U.S.N. Army. He is the commander of the garrison of Fort Morgan, also known as the "Land Destroyer," a battleship on land. Fort Morgan was an important fortress built north of Fort Monas, and it is said that Kirkland, the second head of the garrison, had it converted from its original function as a watchtower into a huge, solid fortress half on his own initiative. At the end of the Second Huffman Conflict, the defeat of the U.S.N. forces, which had continued to retreat after the collapse of the Meer River defense line, was decisive with the fall of this key fortress, which was a key point in the defense of Fort Monas. Although the death of the colonel was not reported in this battle, his subsequent movements are unknown at this time.

A corporal in the Maritime Defense Forces stationed in Limian, C.U., who was attacked by the Revolutionary Guards during the Alor Desh coup d'etat. He used to be an officer in the Alor Desh Army, but when he successfully foiled a planned coup four years earlier by killing Colonel Rob Azad, the mastermind of the coup, he lost his memory from the shock of the battle and was discharged from the army as if he had been banished. He was so tormented by the guilt of betraying his country that he went to Australia and joined the O.C.U. Army, but ironically was deployed to his home country as a garrison officer.

After escaping from the Limian base, he made contact with an Army Defense Force unit that had escaped from Ramanston base on his way to the Indian border. With the help of Bergschomiti, he temporarily escaped to the POW Rescue Force's control ship Montt, but reemerged to rescue his comrades who had been separated from him when he escaped

He was a first-class corporal in the Wehrmacht stationed at Limian, o.c.u., which was attacked by revolutionary forces at the time of the Alor Desh coup. Although there are no detailed records, he is a well-known playboy in the unit, having received a cautionary punishment two years earlier. However, in addition to his frivolous behavior, he also shows a side of a good-natured young man who cares about his fellow soldiers. He is also a good judge of situations, perhaps because he often serves in the rear guard of his troops, and contributes to their decision-making by offering effective advice, backed by his wealth of life experience, to those who are unsure of their course of action.

Escaping an attack by revolutionary forces, he and his comrades, Corporal Farouk and General McCallum, escaped from the Limian base. He temporarily escaped to the POW rescue ship Montt, but for personal reasons to Lilla Lavra, he

A first class officer in the Wehrmacht stationed at Limian, o.c.u., which was attacked by revolutionary forces during the Alor Desh coup d'état. A graduate of the Aviation University, she was initially assigned to the 4th Ground Support Wing of the General Marine Corps as a transport pilot. However, when she was promoted to Airman 1st Class the following year, she refused an assignment to the Airborne Division. He requested to be reassigned to ground duty, and was assigned to his current unit. The reason for his refusal is not clear, as there is no record of it. However, it is rumored that he was always sensitive to danger, and that he avoided the increased danger that would result from his primary mission as a paratrooper.

After escaping an attack by revolutionary forces, she and Corporal Foulke escaped from the Limian base. She temporarily fled to the naval control ship Montt, but was persuaded by the corporals to rescue Sergeant Burnham and
